Vysočina – A Place We Share

Dear Fellow Residents and Visitors,

For five years, Vysočina has existed as an independent regional unit. In that time, it has become firmly established on the map of the Czech Republic. Our region is positively perceived as one with rich entrepreneurial activities, traditional agriculture, and developing industrial production and tourism. It is characteristically seen to have the cleanest environment, cultural monuments, and an ever increasing array of educational, cultural, sporting, and other social opportunities.

We are publishing this brief handbook, entitled "A Pocket Guide to Vysočina," in order to enhance our mutual sense of belonging, to provide you with new information, or just to refresh your memory. I hope that these several pages will clearly show you that Vysočina is not only a beautiful and dynamic region, but also a friendly and open one.

This handbook is to serve as a small testament of these features of our Vysočina. Welcome to Vysočina, and enjoy its beauty!

We Are Here for You...

Dear Residents and Visitors of Vysočina!

I would like to assure you, on both my own behalf and that of all of my colleagues from the Regional Authority, that we do our work primarily for you. In principle, our everyday work has only one goal: to provide you with comprehensive support. No matter whether you live here, or come here for work or recreation, we have enough information to help you achieve your goals: we will guide you safely through all situations in which you may need to rely on state administration, but also give you tips for how and where to spend your leisure time in Vysočina. If we are not able to resolve your problem directly, we will help you find a place where the solution can be obtained. We will be happy if you make use of our services.

Welcome to Vysočina, and enjoy the achievements of its inhabitants.

Simeona Zikmundová

Director of the Regional Authority

...a few facts you may already know

The region's name, "Vysočina" (the Highlands), is derived from the fact that this administrative unit occupies the vast majority of the Czech-Moravian Highlands, an upland area with rolling hills that reach up to over eight hundred meters above sea level. With its area of 6,796 sq. km, Vysočina is the fifth largest Region; its territory occupies 9% of the aggregate area of the Czech Republic.

The region's natural conditions have led to the establishment of more than one thousand settlements. For Vysočina, small villages are typical, not too distant from a local centre, usually a small town with three to ten thousand inhabitants. Only four towns have more than twenty thousand inhabitants, and the region's capital, Jihlava, has fifty thousand. There are 510,032 inhabitants (as at 30 June 2005) in the Region; the density of population – 75 inhabitants per sq. km – is the third lowest in the country.

Vysočina's regional capital is Jihlava, the oldest mining town in the Czech lands, which once was, during the medieval era, one of the richest cities in the Bohemian Kingdom, primarily due to its silver mines.

The Region divides further into 15, so-called, small districts (administrative regions of municipalities with extended powers), and 26 administrative districts of authorised municipal authorities. There are 704 municipalities in the Region, which is the second-highest number, among all of the 14 Regions of the Czech Republic.

Municipalities with extended powers carry out most activities provided under devolved state administrative powers – meaning that they can render most administrative services to their citizens. Aside from these powers, they also exercise their independent powers.

Vysočina – Our Responsibility

...the Region and its Self-Governance

The Region

Act no. 129/2000 Coll., on Regions, defines the Regions in the Czech Republic as higher, territorial self-governing units. It is a territorial community of citizens endowed with the right of self-governance. This community is of the nature of a public corporation – in legal relations, it acts in its own name and bears the responsibility arising from those relations; and within its independent powers it cares for the overall development of its territory, and for the needs of its inhabitants, and co-operates with municipalities (not interfering with their independent powers). Regions, as they exist today in the Czech Republic, were established in 2000, and gradually several powers which have thus far vested with the State are being transferred to them. Legislatively, this arrangement is regulated by Constitutional Act no. 347/1997 Coll., as amended. One of the main reasons for the reform of public administration was the attempt to improve and modernise the execution of public administration, and to make it more accessible to citizens. The main principle of the reform was the, so-called, Joint Public Administration Model, which means that self-governing bodies (regions and municipalities) also carry out, pursuant to special laws, aside from self-governance (the administration of matters concerning the interests of a municipality or Region, as a self-governing unit), state administration within devolved powers (municipal and regional authorities are authorised by the State to execute certain powers and matters, e.g., municipalities are responsible for paying out social benefits).
